Publication of my Historical and Political Who's Who of Afghanistan has aroused considerable interest and elicited a great deal of comment, including suggestions and advice which will be helpful in the production of a revised and expanded second edition of my work. Research on such a project is now in progress but will take additional time because I am attempting to check each entry in the contemporary part with the individuals concerned. However, the political changes in Afghanistan since the Saur Revolution (April, 27, 1978) have made it necessary to provide some information on the new ruling elite, and I have therefore decided to produce a supplement to the existing Who's Who, pending publication of the more comprehensive second edition. The result is this four-part publication which includes 1) a biographical section with some forty entries, 2) a section which lists all government departments with key personnel, 3) a "diplomatic list" with the names and dates of appointment of Afghan and foreign diplomats, and 4) an errata section with corrections of errors found in the first edition of this work.

Part 1 was compiled primarily from secondary sources (see below) but biographical entries were sent to the individuals concerned to obtain verifications, corrections, and amplifications. I was especially pleased by the positive response to my queries by mail because almost half the persons contacted found time to reply and give personal approval to their biographical entries. Several entries are "official" in the sense that they are either only slightly edited versions of accounts written by the individuals themselves, or are based on official publications like the "Short Biography of Noor Mohammad Taraki" which was published by the Political Department of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan (PDPA) of the Armed Forces of Afghanistan in various newspapers and as a separate pamphlet on August 23, 1978. Since this work is historical as well as contemporary, it was felt desirable to also include those individuals who were ousted because of their membership in the Parcham faction of the PDPA or who have purportedly conspired against the Khalqi faction and have therefore been ousted or arrested. As in the first edition of the Who's Who of Afghanistan, the intention was to include all individuals who in some manner participated in the political process in Afghanistan.

Part 2 lists Afghan government positions, including the cabinet as of the end of March 1979 and all ministries since the Saur Revolution. Ministerial positions are listed, including those individuals who were replaced after May, 1978. All governors are listed (under the Ministry of Interior) who served since April, 1978.

Part 3 is a "diplomatic list" of foreign representatives in Kabul and of Afghan tionable dates which could not be eliminated in spite of the assistance extended by various foreign diplomats in Kabul.

Part 4 points out a number of mistakes which were either carried over from secondary sources or—as in the case of the repetition of some entries—were the fault of this writer. Several of the duplicate entries seemed sufficiently different to make it appear plausible that they described different individuals and therefore were mistakenly included.

As to the sources utilized for this publication, I want to mention The Kabul Times, Anis, Da Saur Enqelab, and Haywad—the last three of which were provided free of charge by the Ministry of Information and Culture of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan (DRA).

In regard to transliteration, no effort was made to follow a complex system, furthermore, a few names may be found under alternate spellings.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who facilitated my efforts either by contributing data or various source materials. This includes all those Afghans who responded to my queries, various Afghan ministries and offices, and members of foreign missions in Kabul—including the United States Embassy and its late Ambassador, Adolph Dubs.

I am also thankful to all those who will help in the future with positive criticism, and hope that many who have biographical data on prominent Afghans will share their information with me. Since no one person is an expert on Afghan biography, a project like the Who's Who of Afghanistan depends on the collaboration of all those who can supply one stone in the mosaic making up the total image of the Afghan social, cultural, and political scene.

NOTE: This supplement to the Who's Who was already printed when major governmental changes in Afghanistan in April and July of 1979 made it necessary to revise several parts and to make additions. The organization is now as follows: Part 1 contains the biographical section; Part 2 is the diplomatic list; Part 3 contains the corrections to the first edition; Part 4 supplements the biographical section; Part 5 indicates Afghan government positions, 1978–1979; and Part 6 contains a glossary of terms.

LAYEQ, SULAIMAN

سليمان لایق

Born October 7, 1930, the son of Abdul Ghani Nazim (who was a leading freedom fighter in the Third Anglo-Afghan War, operating under Haji Abdul Raziq, on the Waziristan front). His father was a devotee of Shaikh Ahmad Sarhindi, called the Mujaddidi, Renewer of the Second Millennium, and therefore, he was named Layeq Ghulam Mujaddid. In 1947, having lost faith in the Mujaddidis, Layeq changed his name to Sulaiman, a name his mother wanted to give him, and Layeq, which he obtained from his paternal lineage of seven generations ago.

Prior to attending school he underwent mosque education where he studied popular Dari verse books and elementary Arabic. In 1941 he was enrolled in the second grade of Habibia High School. In 1947 he was enrolled in the secondary level of the Paghman School of Islamic Law, graduating in 1952. He entered the College of Islamic Law, of Kabul University, in 1952, but was expelled in 1954 because of opposition to the Government. He entered the Faculty of Letters, Kabul University, in 1954, and graduated in 1957. He worked with Heywad Newspaper in 1958, and received a first prize in Pashtu verse in the same year. Worked for Radio Afghanistan, 1959–1965. Worked in the Ministry of Information, 1965–67. Editor-in-Chief of Parcham newspaper, 1968. Was a candidate of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan to run for the 12th and 13th Terms of the National Assembly from the city of Pul-i-Khumri, Baghlan Province, 1965 and 1969, and was defeated because of government interference. Was first active in political activities as a student in the 8th grade of the Paghman School of Islamic Law, and was expelled in 1952 temporarily and again in 1953. In 1964 participated in the 27-man Congress which founded the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, in the house of Nur Muhammad Taraki, President of the current Revolutionary Council of the People's Democratic Party. After the Saur Revolution, became Minister of Radio and Television.

His literary life began early: he wrote his first Pashtu poem, published in Anis, while he was in the third grade of primary school. Afterwards he continued to write poetry. Between 1958 and 1960 he won eight government prizes for prose and poetry in both Pashtu and Dari languages. Many of his works were published in East-bloc countries as well as West Germany and France. In 1973 he participated in the Fifth Congress of Asian and African writers. In the same year he participated in the Symposium of Asian and African Poetry in Erevan, Soviet Union. His first poetic work, entitled Chunghar, The Mountain of the Springs, was published in Kabul in Pashtu in 1962. It was banned, but republished subsequently. The second collection of his works, called Kigdai, The Tent, was published in 1976 in New Delhi. The third collection of his Pashtu poems, Yaduna and Darmanduna, The Harvests and Memories, was published in Kabul in July, 1978. President Taraki wrote an introductory note to this work. Layeq is the author of the national anthem of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan. As a student, he translated from Arabic to Dari the book, Mafatih-al-Ulum, by Alama Khwarazmi, which is considered the first Islamic encyclopaedia. His mother tongue is Pashtu, but he also has an excellent command of Dari, English, and Arabic. He is married and has five children. Was said to have stepped down from his positions in the Party and Cabinet in December, 1978.

TARAKI, NUR MUHAMMAD¹

نور محمد تره کی

Born July 15, 1917 (23, Saratan, 1296) in Surkh village (Sere, or Sur, Kalai in Pashtu), Naveh Woleswali, Ghazni province, the son of Nazir Muhammad Taraki. His family is of Kuchi (nomad) and poor peasant background, and endured a hard life as nomads and farmers. Taraki was barely five years old when he was employed as a servant and housekeeper of a widow. But his father wanted him to enjoy the advantages of literacy and sent him to elementary school in Naveh village. (Anis said Muqur district of Ghazni, but Naveh village is now in the Woleswali of the same name, not in Muqur.) In 1932/1311 Taraki came to Kandahar in search of employment and found work as an office boy at the Pashtun Trading Company. He did so well that he was promoted to the position of clerk in the company's Bombay branch office. In Bombay he attended night school and completed his education to the 10th grade. At that time he was said to have met Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, the subsequent fighter for an independent Pashtunistan.² He returned to Afghanistan in 1937/1316 and became increasingly politically aware. According to some sources, he attended the Faculty of Law and Political Science at Kabul University, 1938–1941, and subsequently obtained a diploma at the Faculty of Economics and started work with the Ministry of National Economy.³ Later he worked in the Department of Press and Information for Radio Kabul and the Bakhtar News Agency.⁴ Because of his political activism he was transferred to a low-ranking job in Badakhshan. During the period of liberalization following the resignation of Muhammad Hashim, Taraki's activities resulted in the establishment of a political party. The members of this party, the Wish Zalmiyan (Awakened Youth), first met in 1948 in a house Taraki rented in Chardeh, near Kabul.⁵ The party attracted members of the intelligentsia and the petit bourgeoisie who had national democratic leanings. In 1949⁶ the party published its own weekly organ called Angar (The Embers) in which Taraki demanded "bread, clothing, education, and equality," and the reformation of Afghan society. This led to the suspension of the paper.⁷

Between 1948 and 1953 Taraki increasingly became known as an author and political activist. He published a number of short stories, entitled "Under the Cow," "This is Service,"⁸ "Maxim Gorki," and "What Sort of Freedom." The Afghan Government

1 The following biographical sketch was taken from the Anis of 8. Aqrab 1357/October 30, 1978 and from the Kabul Times of the same date. A number of additions were, however, made on the basis of Klaus Jäkel's "Nur Muhammad Tarakai," in the Afghanistan Journal, Jg. 5, Heft 3, 1978.

2 Jäkel suggests obliquely that Taraki may have been inspired by this "admirer of Lenin" and founder of the "Khuda-i-Khidmatgaran" or "Red Shirts."

3 Jäkel, op. cit.

4 Jäkel, op. cit.

5 According to Jäkel, in late 1946 or early 1947.

6 According to Jäkel, 1951.

7 According to Jäkel, Angar's report of April 16, 1951, on the suppression of the Kabul University Student Union, and the demand for its restoration, led to the suspension of the paper.

8 "Dried Beef"—Gedörrtes Rindfleisch—and "This is my Service," according to Jäkel.

Attache. When Muhammad Daud became Prime Minister of Afghanistan in 1953, Taraki denounced the new regime and left the United States after a tenure of six months in Washington. He returned to Afghanistan, ready to face imprisonment, but was not arrested. Between 1953 and 1963, Taraki had difficulty obtaining a job; therefore, he opened the "Nur Translation Bureau" which did translation work for various Afghan and foreign organizations. At the same time he continued his political activism and published a number of works with revolutionary themes, including "The Drugged Traveller (Dabang Musafir)," "The White" (Spin), "Tsela," "The Peasants Daughter" (Da Bazgar Lur), and "The New Life" (Zendegi Novin), an "appraisal of the three fundamental parts of working class ideology, namely economy, philosophy, and scientific socialism." With the establishment of the government of Muhammad Yusuf in 1963, Taraki was able to operate more openly and consider founding a new party. On January 1, 1965, Taraki invited some 30 young men to his house in Sher Shah Mina in Kabul to convene the Founding Congress of the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan (Hizb-i Demukratik-i Khalq-i Afghanistan). Taraki was chosen a member of the Executive Committee and Secretary General of the party. In 1965 Taraki ran for election as a representative of Naveh district for the Wolesi Jirga, but was unsuccessful. In April 1966, the party published a weekly newspaper called Khalq of which Taraki was the publisher and Muhammad Hasan Bareq-Shafi'i (the subsequent Minister of Information and Culture) the Editor-in-Chief. The paper was suspended after only six issues.

In 1967 the party split into two factions: the "Khalqis" under the leadership of Muhammad Taraki, and the "Parchamis" (from Parcham—banner) under Babrak Karmal. While the Parchamis collaborated with Muhammad Daud after the 1973 Coup, the Khalqis, under the direction of Nur Muhammad Taraki, held themselves aloof and continued to win followers and penetrate the army to achieve their objective of building "a society based on scientific socialism." Hafizullah Amin, the subsequent Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, was entrusted with party work within the Armed Forces. In a relatively short period of time a larger number of officers were won over to the party. In 1976, Muhammad Amin suggested to Taraki that the military was ready to topple the Daud Government. However, the Secretary General counseled patience. Unity was restored between the two factions of the party in July 1977, and Taraki remained Secretary General. Unity was to be in two sectors, the civilian and the military. Unity in the civilian sector—in which the Parchamis were the majority—was to be on a basis of complete equality; in the military sector—in which the Khalqis predominated—the Khalqis were to remain in control. The Daud Government in the meantime created its own party, the National Revolutionary Party (Hizb-i-Inqilab-i-Milli), and eliminated the Parchamis from positions of power. When, on April 17, 1978, a member of the People's Democratic Party, Mir Akbar Khaibar, was killed, thousands gathered in protest at his funeral, and the leaders of the Left, including Nur Muhammad Taraki, were arrested. On April 27, 1978, the Army revolted and the Daud regime was destroyed. On April 30, 1978, Nur Muhammad Taraki was elected President of the Revolutionary Council and Prime Minister of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan.

Born 1945 in Jadarah, Paktinia. Educated at the Military School, 1963-1968. Went to the Soviet Union for higher education and graduated with a degree in engineering in 1969. Started his career in the Air Force, 1969. Participated in the 1973 coup. Minister of Frontier Affairs, 1973, and became Ambassador in Bulgaria in the same year. Afghan Ambassador to Libya, 1977. 26	FARID, AHMAD FARID should read FARID, GUL AHMAD, and this and the subsequent entry (FARID, GUL AHMAD) should be combined into one entry. The correct year of birth is 1929.
35	HASHIMI, MUHAMMAD MANSUR graduated from Columbia University (not University of Arizona), his corrected entry is listed in the biographical section of this Supplement.
74	SHALIZI, ABDUS SATAR, education includes B. A. from Illinois University and M. A. in Education from Columbia Univesity (not studied Hydro Electrics).
77	SIDDIQ, ABDUL FATAH and SIDDIQ, MIR ABDUL FATAH should be combined into one entry.
79	STWODAH, IBRAHIM should read STWODAH, MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM. He is the son of Sultan Mahmud (not Muhammad). Obtained M. S. at Indiana University, 1969.
111	AHMAD SHAH Died in 1952 (not 1951).
164	IBRAHIM KHAN should read IBRAHIM KHAN, MUHAMMAD was in the cabinet of Shah Mahmud Ghazi (not Ghazni).
211	NUR AHMAD Died in 1936 (not 1926) at Kabul.
319	GHULAM YAHYA TARZI 1939 (not 1945) Minister of Communications.
	ABDUL HUSAIN AZIZ 1940 (not 1939).
320	ABDUL HAKIM SHAH ALAMI (Minister of Agriculture) 1944.
Table 56	KABUL SARDARS – Ziai Family. Correction: Aminullah (6) son of Amir Abdur Rahman had three wives (not two). Shahnaz (3–10) was his third wife (not second), she had eight children and Zubaida (9a) was not her daughter.

well as Shahla and Nazima.

- Table 65 The entry "Latifa (15a)" who married Sayyid Abdullah seems not correct. Latifa was listed as a daughter of Muhammad Faruq (8), a son of Amir Habibullah by Mehri (85-4).
- 283-377 The lists of Afghan Government positions are incomplete in some cases.
